

On-Line Global Research Tactics for the Twenty-First Century:
The Foreign Relations of the United States
\(FRUS\) Digital Archive
and Related Online Resources

Friday 23 October, 9-11am, Eastern Standard Time via Zoom

Please join us for another in a series of ad-hoc seminars to explore freely-accessible on-line digital collections with archivists internationally. In the COVID and post-pandemic world, more primary-document research will be conducted via remote devices using new techniques. While upholding the rigors of responsible scholarship, what are the possibilities now available to scholars and students? With massive numbers of free-access collections globally going digital, how do we remain disciplined and targeted when searching, yet also let the information lead us to new findings? As with old-fashioned approaches, the archivists can guide us to new understandings via zoomed meetings.

On 23 October we will explore the Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS) digital archive, and other official U.S. foreign relations documentation online with the Office of the Historian, Department of State. The session will be led by Michael McCoyer, PhD (Northwestern, 2007), Joint Historian with the CIA, and Joseph Wicentowski, Ph.D. (Harvard, 2007), Digital History Advisor.

Other seminars took us to the Rockefeller Archive Center in Tarrytown, NY, and the Open Society Archives in Budapest, Hungary. For recordings of these sessions, please contact Dr. Victoria Phillips, the key organizer of this effort, at the email above.
